While Germany is stroking her Oldenburgers down the grain, and taking precautions against the superiority of French artillery, France ought to open her eyes to the alarming invasion the Tuetons are making to their industry and commerce. Germany took a new departure in her manufactures from the Philadelphia Exhibition, her chief Commissioner then alleged the exhibits of Fatherland were billig and schlecht-cheap and nasty. We have changed all that. Germany having appeared late in the field of industry, has been able to avail herself of all the newer processes and of more extensive plants. She pulled through the terrible Krach of 1873, when industrial and commercial societies went down like nine pins. Then followed a series of bad agricultural years. But since written permit from the Road Supervisor of this District. 1881, Germany has had a run of marvellous prosperity, while in France affairs not stationary, have been retrogade.

Germany has a population of forty-five millions and France of thirty-eight; she has seven millions of workmen, and four and a half millions of horse power, fixed as well as locomobile. France has one million of horse power. Neither country produces enough of food for their populations; they have to import necessaries of life, though on a relatively smaller scale than England. The sugar industry, from beet, is very flourishing in Germany, and she exports. thanks to bounties, one half of what she produces. The latter in 1871 was 14,000 tons; in 1881, 318,000. Distilling is very important. Germany possesses 10,000 distilleries; since 1830 the production of alcohol from rye, beet and potatoes, etc., has doubled, and she exports eight times more than she consumes. France is her largest customer, as the rye alcohol having no repulsive flavor, is employed to fortify wines, and to make cognace and fine champagne. But the Germans, instead of sending rye alcohol to be flavored with the brandy made from grapes at Cognac, import that brandy now to make cognac themselves, and then export the real Stilton also.

Beer, especially from Batavia, has sup-'substitutes' for malt and hops, while the former use only natural materials. There will soon be as many German beer saloons n Paris as in Munich and Berlin put together. But small French wines commence like Goldsmith's pastor, are thus "passing pected to rise daily Moanauli was respected to share the fate of French brewed beers. In cotton industry, Germany has as many spindles, five millions, as France, while England has four times the number of both together. Krefeld by her mixtures of cotton and silk, commands the markets of the world, and has revolutionized the trade of Lyons. The woollen industry of Germany is important, so is her paper industry; in the latter, her competitors are England and Respecting taste in manufactured goods, France shuts her eyes to the immense strides in this important art that England and Germany have made; they so press on her heels as to gall her kibes. German jewelers not only can compete with France abroad, but actually has a footing in Paris. In clothing too, Germany that formerly laid in stocks from France, now manufactures such at home. France remains as "headstrong as an allegory on the banks of the Nile," in producing for special classes, instead of for the masses. Hence, why she is being left behind in the race. Partners in German firms, settle down in Paris and London and reoresent thus directly their own houses, and in the transport of goods, they patronize their own carrying agencies and steamers. In the matter of emigration, for every 100,000 of the population of France, only two persons emigrate; in Italy, the !ratio is 98; in Germany, 145, and in England, 315. In foreign parts France is thus naturally left out in the cold. And when Frenchmen do emigrate, they avoid their own colonies. From 1878 to 1881, the emigration of French citizens was 15,018; of this total, 197 went to Canada and the rest to the United States. This is a bad outlook for the Congo. Madagascar and Tonquin.

France has not an "Almanae Day," but an Almanae month, and which is the present. Paris publishers are just now occupied with no other kind of literature. It is estimated that four million copies of the 97 special almanaes published in France, are struck off yearly; and they represent al undiscovered assassinations in and Gells', not only professions, but science, morality, around Paris since 1878. and amusement. Of late, journals publish an almanac, in the book, not sheet form, while trades adopt the card pattern. These supply the place of "keepsakes," and "Books of Beauty," and similar lights of other [days. Voltaire says, the Chinese were the first people who made almanacs. In the form of calendars; almanacs were very common among all nations of antiquity. The astrologers and doctors had at first the monopoly of publishing almanaes; they form a vade mecum for the latter, as bleedings and purgations were regulated by joke. The French Government have just the phases of the moon, and the more or less "still and saint-like" look of the stars. Thus Rabelais, as a physician, published his almanae at Lyons, in 1534. The church from an early date employed the almanac to indicate the movable festivals, and laid down rules to fix them in advance. Charles I, decreed that every almanac before publication should possess the visa of the Bishop, in whose diocese it appeared. The almanac down to the coup ries ago was for country schools and peas-In Germany, Melanchthon the Reformer, reformed that kind of school work. No ting materials and lamp oil, he there retired and was never more seen. His almanac still appears. Those people with the mania for rumaging illustrious tombs might arrange for an Asmodean peep. La-Herald of his day. His niece was his amanlating his meteorology for the following August; on coming to the 23rd of that month he announced "stormy and much rain." "But uncle," observed his neice, "that will be your birthday"-"Then write very fine and sultry."

It is accepted that France and China are drifting into war, and each would like to saddle the other with its formal declaration. The Deputies are invited to vote ten million francs as preliminary sinews. The Municipal Council of Paris has astonished every one by its good sense in refusing to resuscitate the National Guard. The legislators appear disinclined, as a recompense, to sanction a central mayor for the capital. There is less talk about expelling the Orleanist Princes, still further evidence of augmenting common sense. Though royal marriages do not now effect the destiny of nations, yet the contemplated marriage of the Emperor of Russia's brother, the Grand Duke Alexis, with the daughter of the Comte de Paris, may have sobered the "all or none" politicians. In February 1848, when the Duchesse d'Orleans appeared with her 2 children-now the Comte de Paris and the Duc de Chartres, at the Chamber of Deputies, then stormed by the revolution- a Privy Councillor, and held the office until ists, the Comte de Paris got separated from his mother by the angry crowd. He was secured, perhaps saved, by a Russian volet. He thus owes a debt of gratitude to Russia.

A kind of demonstration in favor of religion will be made, in connection with the funeral of Cardinal Bonnechase, late Arch Bishop of Rouen. The ceremony promises to be imposing. Politically the public had no cause to complain of the deceased. France has eighty-four prelates, of whom seventeen are archbishops, each with a salary of 20,-600 francs a year, and 10,000 francs additional if a Cardinal. The Bishops receive pressed French brewers; the latter relied on | 15,000 francs. There are 180 vicars general, whose income varies from 2,500 to 4,500 fr. parish priests receive 1,200 to 1,600 francs, and the vicars 900 to 1,000 franc-the latter rich with forty pounds a year,"

Many cures have been suggested for ter magant wives, from Xantippe downwards. The following is uncommon; a husband after a very strong and long series of curtoin lectures, when his wife "had done," cooly locked her up in a room, then set fire to the house, threatening to shoot any person who played at fireman. The Comtesse de Salles, rich, young, handsome, and fashionable and the mother of five little children, was down with the brain fever. She managed to throw herself out of a window but was picked up scarcely injured; next day she repeated the act and was killed. A houseporter's wife, wishing "not to shock anybody.', entered a clothes press and hanged

The assizes of Perigueux have tried a singular crime. Lucia loved Camille; both were in their teens, and since two years they were engaged. Her father, a rich farmer, destined Lucia for a richer husband, but she refused. The father then consented to the wedding, but on the day appointed changed his mind and dismissed the guests. After a few months he again consented, the wedding day was fixed, all was ready; the bridegroom alone was absent. He had been murdered the night before by Pinsat his intended brother-in-law, with whom he had dined, and thrown into a horse pond. The bride's father had given Pinsat, his son-inlaw, 4,000 francs for removing Camille. When suspicions crowded round Pinsat he cooly proposed that his mother-in-law, who might repeat "to what base uses we have come," should avow she committed the crime. Pinsat, after declaring "in the name of the French nation" his innocence, was sentenced to twenty years' transportation. The "mourning bride," a wreck by the deed, and doomed to rejoin her lover in a few weeks, had to be supported by the doctors, as she related her heritage of woe. By the capture of the chief and his band of the Neuilly thieves, the police appear to have in hand the perpetrators of the sever-

Yesterday a brief notice was given of the sudden death of J. Moanauli. He was in his usual health throughout Monday and thy with the object of the meeting, but bewhat the opposition was about. Hall's store where he remained for about 14 or 15 Hall found Moanauli to be an henest and upright servant. Having saved a little money he then started in business on his own account. He established a Poi Manufactory on a very large scale, in connection with which he had a butchery. He disposed of his produce and meats at a stall in the market where he was well and favorably known by his customers and business companions. During the reign of the late King Lunalilo, he was appointed ent Majesty, King Kalakaua, John Moanauli was created a member of the House of Nobles. His familiar face, modest and unassuming style in the the Legislature will long be remembered by all who have had the honor to sit in the House. He was a firm supporter of every bill that tended to benefit the people and the country. He leaves one son, J. Moanauli, two daughters and one son-in-law, David Manaku, delivery clerk in the Postoffice. Through his own industry and that or his wife, Moanauli acquired considerable property, and he has no doubt left his widow a handsome compewell on his land at Waikiki, which is alby all who knew him, and he was known by all his friends to be steady, honest and persevering.
